For the past few years, if you went down to west London – somewhere near Boston Manor tube in Brentford – and stood under the M4 motorway in early June, you might have been able to hear some of the world's best techno and house. That's because, since 2016, local festival Junction 2 has quietly been becoming one of the best-booked electronic music festivals in London. Obviously, this year it's off because of The Bad Thing. So, instead, organisers are putting on a virtual six-hour party. On the line-up? Adam Beyer, Alan Fitzpatrick, Anna, Bart Skils, Joel Mull and more. It promises to be more than just a series of live-streamed DJ sets, though. The event, held from 6pm-midnight on Saturday July 11, is described as existing in a '3D digital setting' called J2v. You can expect three stages – The Console, The Hex and The Vault – each with its own immersive visuals, vibe, aesthetics and opportunities for real-time engagement. The Console, for example, promises a virtual dancefloor featuring a globe-shaped stage on top of a giant pyramid so that you can see it 'wherever you're standing'. Junction2 is on Saturday July 11, 6pm-midnight. Tune in here. See the best London events you can stream now. Popular on Time Out

Three dimensional (3D) is something that has width, height, and depth. Our physical world is three dimensional, and we are able to perceive 3D because of the depth perception in our eyes. In relation to computers, 3D describes an image that provides the illusion of depth or varying distances. This is commonly used in films, graphics, computer games and virtual reality. 3D computer graphics generate and display 3D objects in a two-dimensional (2D) space, such as a display screen. Whereas pixels in a 2D graphic have the properties of position, color, and brightness, 3D pixels add a depth property that indicates where the point lies on an imaginary Z-axis. When many pixels are combined, each with its own depth value, the result is a 3D surface, called a texture. In addition to textures, 3D graphics also supports multiple objects interacting with one another. For example, a solid object may partially hide an object behind it. 3D films are motion pictures made to give an illusion of 3D depth, typically with the help of special glasses worn by the viewer. The first 3D movie came out in 1922 and has evolved to what it is today. To achieve 3D video, stereoscopic vision is used, meaning that two separate images are shown simultaneously, one to each eye. Closer objects appear more separated than distant ones. There are different types of 3D glasses that work in tandem with projection in order for the movie to become 3D. A few examples include: Red/Cyan glasses (Anaglyphic processing); The original 3D system that is now largely out of use. Polarized filter glasses (Polarized light system); The most common system for cinemas today. LCD shutter glasses (Active shutter system); Newest, battery powered glasses that will most likely be the standard for 3D television. 3D printing 3D printing, also known as additive manufacturing, is the process of making a 3D, solid object from a digital file. Printing can be done with plastic, resin, and even metal. To print a 3D object, a digital model must be created using Computer Aided Design (CAD). The design is then imported to 3D printing software where the model is sliced into layers to be read by the 3D printer. The printer then produces layers of material one on top of the other. Industries that use 3D printing include education, prototyping and manufacturing, medicine, construction, and art industries.
